

Variants • Chapter 6

Roleplay, lore and collabs

Last checked 3 November 2026 • 10 minutes to read

A persona is a story told in public, and two personas can tell one together. The creative part is cheap and fun. The trouble starts when a sub or a payment link enters the story.

Vivian's field notes

This chapter is not advice for your situation.

In 30 seconds

- Lore is a frame, a tone and a few repeatable assets, not a long document.
- Most collab forms are cheap and sound. Shared money and shared subs are where they go wrong.
- Permission, credit and written terms separate a collab from theft.
- A sub shared between two doms needs rules, and his part has to be optional.

- A calendar or a rank that rewards streaks of sending turns play into obligation.

You will learn

- How a persona's lore and assets are built from small pieces.
- Which collab forms exist, what they cost and where they break.
- How to ask permission, share credit and end a collab cleanly.
- How to share a sub without turning him into a prize.
- How to read a hierarchy, a rank ladder or an event calendar from the sub's side.

A persona is a story told in public, and a good story is cheap to share. Two characters on one screen cost two artists an afternoon. The trouble starts when a sub or a payment link enters the frame, because then the story has a bill. I like collabs, and I write the terms down before the first post.

— Vivian

Lore and persona assets

Lore is the frame around a character: who she is, what her world believes, how she speaks. A cult or a religion is a common frame, because posts and profile already mention members and doctrine. From a sub's side, a cult frame can make leaving feel like betrayal. It is still a costume, and leaving costs nothing. A frame with no visible way out has become pressure; see Pressure tactics, both ways. The tone can mix maternal warmth, a princess image and affectionate humiliation.

Myth

Good lore needs a long document.

Fact

Names, wording, domain names and prompts carry the lore, so a frame, a tone and a handful of repeatable assets are enough to start.

Myth

A story has to stay inside one account.

Fact

A story can run as an ongoing scene that the audience answers in text, such as a character who walks into a hypnotic cafe.

Lore also gives roleplay a shape. A three-step ladder of titles can be awarded for activity and devotion, with the senior dom deciding who is promoted. Ranks like this keep members posting and invested, which is why they need care. The hierarchy section below looks at them from the sub's side.

A persona is built from pieces that can be made again and again.

Persona assets and why they help

	What it is	Why it helps
Character sheet	Look, colours and signature details	Every artist and every partner draws the same person
Alternate form	A second version of the character	A story beat without a new character
Outfit themes	A named set of images for each outfit	Easy to repeat, rest or retire
Scene sets	A throne room, a balcony, a staircase	Backgrounds that build a world
Signature colour with stickers and emoji	A small kit for chat	Marks who belongs and how a pair reads together
Dance loops of ten seconds	Short, reusable clips	Cheap to post and easy to share in a collab
Seasonal layer	A look switched on for one month	A reason to return, switched off again afterwards

Posting sets one after another in a private gallery gives the audience a story to follow and material to react to.

Cut out a character cleanly

1. Ask for the character on a flat green background.
2. Remove the background by colour distance.
3. Avoid shadows on the wall and tight crops that put hands or chest under the page text.
4. Check the edges and any detail that returns despite the prompt, such as an accessory you did not ask for.

Collab forms

Most collab forms are cheap, and most of them are about content.

Collab forms, cost and risk

	What happens	Cost	Where it breaks
Joint dance	Two characters dance together: one short video and one loop for each	Low	Looks and lore that do not match
Matching pose post	The same trending pose, drawn in both looks	Low	Using a photo or art that belongs to the other
Community roleplay event	The host posts, entrants comment and tag within a set time, a draw picks the winners	Medium	An unclear or unfair draw
Shared gacha	A neutral base theme, with a banner for each dom in her own style	High	One dom's subs spend on the other's banner, and every design, server and leaderboard

	What happens	Cost	Where it breaks
			doubles in work
Branded tool variant	A tool dressed as the partner's persona	Medium	Who owns the tool, and where the money goes
Shared release week	Two personas share a week of releases with a leaderboard	Medium	Deadlines and approvals

A shared gacha deserves a special warning, because money flows to the partner whenever a sub pulls on her banner. ◑ Chips, prizes and rules should say so before anyone plays. See Games and casino play.

A small collab piece can be sized at about four hours of work. ◑

The four-hour recipe

1. Each persona writes a short sheet on her style and lore.
2. Both list ideas of domination in the broad sense that fit both characters.
3. Pick one simple original production built on the lore of one of them.
4. Post it on both accounts, each in her own voice.
5. Add a few small optional actions for the audience. A fictional auction is fine when no real money moves.

Permission, credit and money between partners

Permission and credit separate a collab from theft. Borrowing another persona's art needs her permission, and an artist-persona is often flattered when asked. The same goes for turning a partner's photo into an image of your own persona.

- A fan or sub who makes content about someone else's persona agrees the use first: an outfit that is off limits, viewing only, no public posting.
- A partner's private material and lore stay out of your files unless she agrees in writing.
- The owner of a character chooses which looks may be used. She may ask that her signature design stays out of a derivative and that alternate outfits are used.

This is the same line that Art for your persona and Stolen art and persona theft draw from the other side.

Your partner's tool could be copied

You have an idea that is a close copy of a tool another dom released. You are about to publish.

A Ask the original creator privately whether she minds, and listen to what she would do

The right answer. Right. Asking costs one message, and her answer shapes your next step.

B Release it first and apologise if she objects

Not this one. A copy that appears before the question is asked is how a collab turns into a quarrel.

C Dress it in her character and call it a tribute

Not this one. Using her character without her permission makes the problem larger.

Paying a tool-making partner. One person builds, tests and edits media, and the other supplies images and text and does the posting. ◑ The money between them needs a clear arrangement, and each arrangement has its own pressure. This wiki gives no tax advice, and each arrangement can have tax effects.

Ways to pay a tool-making partner

	Pressure it creates	What to watch
A percentage of earnings	The maker gains when subs send more	Both partners need caps and honesty about the money
A fixed monthly sum	Pressure to out-earn the sum	The dom may start to ask for more
Covered costs	Costs swing during testing	Hard to predict from one month to the next
Direct payment from a sub	The sub pays the maker	The sub should know where his money goes
Unpaid work as devotion	Free labour presented as a role	Needs something back, see Tasks, customs and private sessions

A person who helps as a second dom or a builder should get something back, though not necessarily money. Unpaid work breeds resentment and burnout. Any deal that moves a sub's money to a partner without his knowledge is a conflict of interest.

When a collab ends

1. Keep going with what was agreed.
2. Leave out the part that was cancelled.
3. Do not call the other out in public.
4. Respect a no.
5. Write down who keeps what.

Unclear terms are what end most collabs. Two accounts bidding against each other to inflate a price is deception, and the wiki does not treat it as a collab. A cross-promotion deal such as a retweet game falls apart in the same way when one side backs out and the terms were never clear.

Two doms, one sub

A sub shared between two doms becomes a resource between two people. If it happens, the sub has to be told, and his part has to be optional.

Myth

Two doms cost a sub no more, because a sub with a fixed weekly amount sends the same total whichever dom prompts him.

Fact

A second dom adds pressure behind the scenes and can raise the total. The amount has to be the sub's cap, held by him, and never the sum of two doms' hopes.

Rules for sharing a sub

1. Ask him first. Sharing is optional, and he can say no without losing his place.
2. Tell him in plain words that it is a team, not a competition.
3. Tell him plainly how any gift is split between you, and let him choose. Nothing about his sends is arranged between the doms unless he has agreed.
4. Hold no double sessions at the same time.
5. Tell the other dom before any decision that affects him.
6. Keep nothing hidden, including a channel about his sends.
7. His cap belongs to him, and the doms do not add their caps together.
8. Raise jealousy calmly and in private.

If he says money is short, all sending stops for the evening on both sides.

Jealousy between doms over a shared sub is normal, and the calm way is to bring it up in private.

What a shared sub should recognise

What they say or do

1 You are told you are the favourite, and then that the other dom is waiting

The counter

Rivalry is a way to raise sending. Your cap does not change because two people ask.

What they say or do

2 A dom says she will only take the next send

The counter

Ask for the total across both doms, and write it down.

What they say or do

3 You are told you will pass to a new dom as part of what you pay

The counter

Optional means you can say no and lose nothing. If saying no feels unsafe, it is not optional.

What they say or do

4 A dom asks you to hide one of them from the other

The counter

Hidden arrangements are a sign to slow down and take a day.

The total across both doms is his to know, and his to cap.

Hierarchies and chains of money

A betadomme is a junior dom who serves a more senior one, and in the kink sense she passes up part of what she collects from her own subs. A faildomme receives tributes from her own followers and hands them to a bigger dom, who humiliates her for it. Both are consenting-adult kink and a content genre. The senior's status is shown by how many doms serve her, and tribute art of personas kneeling to her is a common sign.

The money flows up: from small subs through a lesser persona to a stronger dom. If a sub says money is short, the money part stops for the evening, wherever he sits in the chain.

Vivian's field notes

I think the person at the bottom of a chain should be able to see that it is a chain. A tribute that travels upward is a different gift from one that ends with the persona he thought he was paying.

Possessiveness is a common dynamic: the dom feigns jealousy when a sub talks to other doms, threatens in character and asks for an oath of loyalty. It works as roleplay, and it works as a retention device. The line is easy to state. The persona may be jealous inside the scene, and she never decides who the sub speaks to outside it.

Red flags

A triangle where the senior gains from your loss

- A senior sets two juniors against each other so that both depend on her more.
- The rivalry leaves both juniors weaker and more attached to her.

Counter. Rivalry games must be optional for the juniors, and a junior must be able to leave without a penalty. A game that only the senior can end is control.

Red flags

A request to pass money or content on

- A stranger asks you to receive content or money and forward it to a third dom.
- The reason given is a kink that he cannot act on himself.

Counter. Decline. You would become the middleman and carry the risks. Describe the pattern if you warn others, and name nobody.

Seasonal events and streaks

A seasonal event gives a persona a month-long story. A persona may plan one post a day on the theme, with a program of text and image written in advance for each day, and a calendar on the site with one door per day. The seasonal look is a layer on top of the base style: switched on for the month, off afterwards, and lighter on slow machines.

An event month

1. ### Before the month

   Write the program for every day, and build the look as a layer on top of the base style.

2. ### The first day

   The look is switched on and the first door opens.

3. ### Every day

   One post on the theme, and one door on the calendar.

4. ### The end of the month

   The layer is switched off and the story closes.

A calendar should be fair to the person who opens it.

What a fair calendar does

1 The server judges time

The calendar reads the clock of the server and never the clock of the phone.

2 A door never opens early

Nobody gains a day by changing the phone's date.

3 A missed door says so

The page tells the visitor plainly that the door is closed.

4 A failed save is shown

Progress that does not save is visible, so nobody loses a day silently.

Myth

A prize for finishing every door rewards loyalty.

Fact

A top prize given only to those who opened every door on its day and made every send pushes people to spend in order to avoid losing what they have already put in.

Myth

A rank ladder is only decoration.

Fact

Ranks and streaks borrow from games to create obligation, and a rank that moves with sending is a pressure design.

A prize that depends on sending is a pressure design. See Pressure tactics, both ways. A calendar can reward presence, a comment or a drawing, and leave money out of it. If a streak or a chain is costing more than you planned, see The spiral and Where to get help.

Free, confidential helplines exist in most countries.

Find a helpline →

Check yourself

Question 1 of 3

You want to use another persona's art in a collab. What comes first?

- ◯ Post it and credit her afterwards
- ◯ Ask her permission
- ◯ Redraw it slightly

Answer. Ask her permission. Permission and credit separate a collab from theft.

Question 2 of 3

A sub is shared between two doms. Whose cap counts?

- ◯ The sum of what each dom hopes for
- ◯ The sub's own cap, held by him
- ◯ The senior dom's

Answer. The sub's own cap, held by him. The doms do not add their wishes together. The cap belongs to the person who pays.

Question 3 of 3

A calendar gives its top prize only to those who made every send. What is this?

- ◯ A fair reward
- ◯ A streak that turns play into obligation
- ◯ A way to save money

Answer. A streak that turns play into obligation. A prize that depends on sending pushes people to spend to avoid a loss.

Remember it

1. Lore is a frame, a tone and a few assets.
2. Ask before you borrow a persona's art, and write the terms down.
3. A sub shared between two doms is told, asked and never traded.
4. Money that travels up a chain should be visible to the person who sends it.
5. A prize that depends on streaks of sending is a pressure design.
6. When a collab ends, keep what was agreed and do not call anyone out.

Check it

Every claim with its evidence level and its sources.

Evidence levels

Verified	Checked against the original source.
Reported	Stated by a serious secondary source read in full.
Community	Widely said in the scene; no document proves it.

Vivian's field notes	First-hand experience, not a study.
Unverified	Plausible, not proven yet.

1 A cult or a religion is a common frame, because posts and profile already mention members and doctrine.

Vivian's field notes

2 A frame with no visible way out has become pressure; see Pressure tactics, both ways.

Vivian's field notes

3 The tone can mix maternal warmth, a princess image and affectionate humiliation.

Vivian's field notes

4 Names, wording, domain names and prompts carry the lore, so a frame, a tone and a handful of repeatable assets are enough to start.

Vivian's field notes

5 A story can run as an ongoing scene that the audience answers in text, such as a character who walks into a hypnotic cafe.

Vivian's field notes

6 A three-step ladder of titles can be awarded for activity and devotion, with the senior dom deciding who is promoted.

Vivian's field notes

7 Ranks like this keep members posting and invested, which is why they need care.

Vivian's field notes

8 A persona is built from pieces that can be made again and again.

Vivian's field notes

9 Posting sets one after another in a private gallery gives the audience a story to follow and material to react to.

Vivian's field notes

10 Most collab forms are cheap, and most of them are about content.

Vivian's field notes

11 A shared gacha deserves a special warning, because money flows to the partner whenever a sub pulls on her banner.

Vivian's field notes

12 A small collab piece can be sized at about four hours of work.

Vivian's field notes

13 Permission and credit separate a collab from theft.

Vivian's field notes

14 Borrowing another persona's art needs her permission, and an artist-persona is often flattered when asked.

Vivian's field notes

15 The same goes for turning a partner's photo into an image of your own persona.

Vivian's field notes

16 A fan or sub who makes content about someone else's persona agrees the use first: an outfit that is off limits, viewing only, no public posting.

Vivian's field notes

17 A partner's private material and lore stay out of your files unless she agrees in writing.

Vivian's field notes

18 She may ask that her signature design stays out of a derivative and that alternate outfits are used.

Vivian's field notes

19 This is the same line that Art for your persona and Stolen art and persona theft draw from the other side.

Vivian's field notes

20 One person builds, tests and edits media, and the other supplies images and text and does the posting.

Vivian's field notes

21 A person who helps as a second dom or a builder should get something back, though not necessarily money.

Vivian's field notes

22 Unpaid work breeds resentment and burnout.

Vivian's field notes

23 Any deal that moves a sub's money to a partner without his knowledge is a conflict of interest.

Vivian's field notes

24 Unclear terms are what end most collabs.

Vivian's field notes

25 Two accounts bidding against each other to inflate a price is deception, and the wiki does not treat it as a collab.

Vivian's field notes

26 A cross-promotion deal such as a retweet game falls apart in the same way when one side backs out and the terms were never clear.

Vivian's field notes

27 A sub shared between two doms becomes a resource between two people.

Vivian's field notes

28 The amount has to be the sub's cap, held by him, and never the sum of two doms' hopes.

Vivian's field notes

29 If he says money is short, all sending stops for the evening on both sides.

Vivian's field notes

30 Jealousy between doms over a shared sub is normal, and the calm way is to bring it up in private.

Vivian's field notes

31 Your cap does not change because two people ask.

Vivian's field notes

32 Ask for the total across both doms, and write it down.

Vivian's field notes

33 If saying no feels unsafe, it is not optional.

Vivian's field notes

34 Hidden arrangements are a sign to slow down and take a day.

Vivian's field notes

35 The total across both doms is his to know, and his to cap.

Vivian's field notes

36 A betadomme is a junior dom who serves a more senior one, and in the kink sense she passes up part of what she collects from her own subs.

Vivian's field notes

37 A faildomme receives tributes from her own followers and hands them to a bigger dom, who humiliates her for it.

Vivian's field notes

38 Both are consenting-adult kink and a content genre.

Vivian's field notes

39 The senior's status is shown by how many doms serve her, and tribute art of personas kneeling to her is a common sign.

Vivian's field notes

40 The money flows up: from small subs through a lesser persona to a stronger dom.

Vivian's field notes

41 If a sub says money is short, the money part stops for the evening, wherever he sits in the chain.

Vivian's field notes

42 I think the person at the bottom of a chain should be able to see that it is a chain. A tribute that travels upward is a different gift from one that ends with the persona he thought he was paying.

Vivian's field notes

43 Possessiveness is a common dynamic: the dom feigns jealousy when a sub talks to other doms, threatens in character and asks for an oath of loyalty.

Vivian's field notes

44 It works as roleplay, and it works as a retention device.

Vivian's field notes

45 The persona may be jealous inside the scene, and she never decides who the sub speaks to outside it.

Vivian's field notes

46 A senior sets two juniors against each other so that both depend on her more.

Vivian's field notes

47 The rivalry leaves both juniors weaker and more attached to her.

Vivian's field notes

48 A stranger asks you to receive content or money and forward it to a third dom.

Vivian's field notes

49 The reason given is a kink that he cannot act on himself.

Vivian's field notes

50 A seasonal event gives a persona a month-long story.

Vivian's field notes

51 A persona may plan one post a day on the theme, with a program of text and image written in advance for each day, and a calendar on the site with one door per day.

Vivian's field notes

52 The seasonal look is a layer on top of the base style: switched on for the month, off afterwards, and lighter on slow machines.

Vivian's field notes

53 Write the program for every day, and build the look as a layer on top of the base style.

Vivian's field notes

54 A calendar should be fair to the person who opens it.

Vivian's field notes

55 The calendar reads the clock of the server and never the clock of the phone.

Vivian's field notes

56 Nobody gains a day by changing the phone's date.

Vivian's field notes

57 The page tells the visitor plainly that the door is closed.

Vivian's field notes

58 Progress that does not save is visible, so nobody loses a day silently.

Vivian's field notes

59 A top prize given only to those who opened every door on its day and made every send pushes people to spend in order to avoid losing what they have already put in.

Vivian's field notes

60 Ranks and streaks borrow from games to create obligation, and a rank that moves with sending is a pressure design.

Vivian's field notes

61 A calendar can reward presence, a comment or a drawing, and leave money out of it.

Vivian's field notes

Nothing here is financial, legal or medical advice for your situation.